Tiny Ghost and Goblins Take Over the Women’s Hospital of Texas at Conroe Regional Medical Center

Conroe, Texas, October 30, 2009— The babies at The Women’s Hospital of Texas at Conroe Regional Medical Center (CRMC) are showing the community that it is never too early to start trick or treating. Babies in the NICU nursery at CRMC have been dressed up in the tiniest of costumes to celebrate this holiday beloved by children of all ages.

“Families with babies in the NICU nursery sometimes miss out on these special moments in their newborn’s life,” explains Lisa Hutchins, Director of the Women’s Hospital of Texas at CRMC. “We try and allow for our NICU babies to experience what any other baby would during their first Halloween.”

The Women’s Hospital of Texas at CRMC hosts the region’s most experienced Level III NICU. CRMC’s team of physicians and nurses care for premature babies every day of the year. These babies, often in their care for extended periods of time, are provided one-on-one compassionate care, while their parents are prepared for taking home their premature baby.

“Our Neonatal Transport Team reaches out into the community – often from as far away as 100 miles – to bring premature babies into The Woman’s Hospital of Texas at CRMC for care that will give them the best start in life,” says Jerry Nash, CEO of CRMC. “Watching their babies participate in these special celebrations gives the parents an encouraging outlook on what the future holds.”
